Approved For Release 2005/12/14: CIA-RDP86B00985R000200250005-9

Confidential

7 September 1979

MEHORANDUM

SUBJECT: Political Situation In Nigeria

When General Obasanjo's regime formally hands over power on 1 October, Nigeria will again face the uncertainties of civilian government after 13 years of military rule. President-elect Shehu Shagari, standard bearer of the conservative, northern-Muslim oriented National Party, is expected to maintain the basic tenets of Nigeria's nonaligned foreign policy and its mixed economy.

Shagari is a 55-year old Muslim Fulani tribesman with extensive parliamentary and ministerial experience. He has a reputation for honesty, moderation, and administrative abilities. His pragmatism and consensus approach to government tould make him a relatively non-controversial president, which many Nigerian observors believe is just the kind of leader Nigeria needs to launch its Second Republic. On the other hand, Shagari may not prove a forceful enough leader to keep Nigeria's centrifugal forces under control. Shagari's main image defect is that he is widely perceived to be a weak man, which reflects his lack of charisma, quiet and unassuming demeanor, and wooden speaking style. Moreover, he is not in charge of his party but is beholden to its collective senior leadership which expects to dominate policy making.

Although his party proved to have the broadest multi-ethnic base, Shagari's wargin of victory was slim and is being legally contested by opposition candidates. He lacks a governing majority in the federal legislature, where none of Nigeria's three major ethnic groups predominate, which will require coalition building and may force a more cooperative effort to make civilian rule work. Shagari's capacity to govern also depends on the continued ability of the National Party—an often uneasy alliance of rival political barons—to pull together

The National Party has a pro-business bias in that it represents nationally much of the country's commercial elite and Shagari himself has many business interests and once served as finance minister. The party's manifesto gives first priority to revitalizing agriculture along with development of industry and greater incentives to foreign investment and domestic private enterprise as the

Approved For Release 2005/12/14: CIA-RDP86B00985R000200250005-9

25X1

25X1

25X1

Approved For Release 2005/12/14: CIA-RDP86B00985R000200250005-9

Confidential

	•
approach to improve the lot of the mass of improverished Nigerians. government probably would continue a fairly aggressive oil policy repricing and government participation, but be less inclined to use oi 25% political weapon.	ecardine
The new civilian government will be under strong pressure to out its military predecessor. Its survival will depend on its ability to traditional ethnic and religious divisions, to manage the economy and with financial problems, and to cultivate its relationship with the lower ranks are not enthusiastic about civilian rule. Civilians, profrontational religious applies a sould are frontational religious applies and the financial religious applies are financial religious.	o cope with  nd to deal  army whose  one to confrontational politics, could easily fall victim to a rising tide of social and economic demands created by rapid and uneven development, growth and crime, rising expectations, and continued inflation. Many assume that a civilian government inevitably will breakdown after two and be replaced by a new generation of more nationalistic and for military leaders. If the Nigerian experiment succeeds reasonably well	urban Nigerians Oyears or Ceful II. it could influence other African states to move toward restoration of crule. If it fails badly, Nigerians are unlikely to try a democratic 25Xagain for a long time.	civilian system
Foreign policy under Shagari will continue to reflect the goals of fostering majority rule in southern Africa, playing a leade on the continent, opposing foreign intervention in Africa, and promo interests of African and other less developed countries in internati Because the Shagari government is likely to be preoccupied with dome and stability at least initially, its foreign policy may be somewhat servative, less activist, and more dependent on closer economic coop 25Xthe West.	ership role  oting the  lonal forums.  estic issues  others con-
The return to constitutional rule may affect to some degree the ability to act in the foreign policy area, and it could find it more to support Western initiatives that are in Nigeria's broad interests isive forces in Higerian society will be more manifest, certain presactions will require legislative approval, and the government will he contend with a more outspoken press and other interest groups.	e difficult . The div- sidential
The improved climate of Nigerian-US relations is likely to cont the overall closeness of relations will remain to heavily depen Nigerian perceptions of the sincerity of US policy toward southern A faltering of US committment could revive residual resentment rooted remembered as US hostility toward federalNigeria during the 1967-70 The National Party displays generally friendly attitudes toward the voiced positions on several international issues favorable to US international seriously wants more US investment and technology.	dent on frica. Any in what is civil war. US. has
	2